Tribler

Tribler is an alternative to existing P2P services like PirateBay, eMule or BitTorrent. While these services offer P2P file sharing, they are susceptible to attacks and are therefore vulnerable to legal and technical issues. Tribler goes way beyond P2P - it is a completely anonymous file sharing client that does not leave a trace on your computer. Tribler is completely decentralized, no tracking of IP addresses takes place, no intermediary servers exist. People can join Tribler and other users can share files and content directly with each other. The main focus is to make file sharing anonymous, so that nobody will know where the data came from or who is sharing it with. Working principle: Before you download a file, you request it from another "cousin" of yours. This cousin can be a physical person in your environment or a computer on the Internet. He shares his data with you and you share yours with him. The advantage: Very secure file sharing: Torrents are used to download files, a special application for that (called a "client" for BitTorrent). No intermediary servers: No need to change downloads using download managers or other software that might leave a trace. Privacy and security: You remain completely anonymous, and will not get anything in return. The risk: Downloads are automatically checked, this means that they are directly exchanged between persons. Therefore, sensitive data should not be shared without encryption. Tribler Features: Directly download torrents without intermediaries No trace of downloads left on your computer Secure connection and no third party Legal The application is in accordance with the license system of the GNU General Public License and is therefore legal to use. FAQ Can I do anything with the data I download? Yes. As long as you have the right to use it, you are free to use the file for your own purposes. Is there anything else I need to know?
